ARCHITECT Jefferson City Country Club first opened for play in 1922. Originally a nine hole venue, a Larry Packard-designed second nine was added in the 1960s. The golf course was closed from July 7, 2008 to May 23, 2009 for complete greens reconstruction, rerouting of a few holes, and bunker reconstruction. All 18 existing "push-up" greens were rebuilt to USGA specifications. The old Penncross bentgrass and poa annua turf was replaced with modern A-series bentgrass. Nine greens were relocated and re-contoured to improve playability and increase cupping space. The work was done by the design team of Bob and Matt Lohman. The renovation has stretched the private layout to around 7,100 yards from the tips.
